

Torene A Butterfield

Secretary

Torene A. Butterfield serves as Secretary of the Etiquette Etiquette Foundation, supporting organizational coordination, communication, and the Foundation's mission of preparing young people for educational and professional opportunities.

Torene has a strong interest in international affairs, public policy, and diplomacy. Her aspirations include government service and work that advances international cooperation. She is particularly interested in how policy decisions affect communities and how young people can participate meaningfully in civic and global conversations.

Her language background includes studies in French, Mandarin Chinese, Russian, and Korean. She holds a DELF French language certification. Her interest in languages complements her passion for understanding different cultures and strengthening communication across cultural boundaries.

Her educational background includes experience at the Naval Academy Preparatory School and the United States Naval Academy. She also has an interest in historical research, including the contributions of Black veterans and the connections between military service, community history, and public policy.

Through her work with the Foundation, Torene brings a young adult's perspective to conversations about opportunity, leadership, and professional readiness. She is committed to helping young people broaden their horizons and recognize the value of their voices in their communities and the wider world.
